Growth of Railroads. "Poor's Manual of Railroads" for 1900 has a very interesting review of the developments of railroads in this country. The railroad system in the United States had its birth with the conception noting the beginning of the construction of this road, which, at one time, was considered as almost impossible, the Manual says: "The day was appropriate to the occasion. It was July 4, and the ceremony of breaking ground was performed by the venerable Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the only surviv-

The Baltimore & Obio railroad when it first opened for traffic was operated by horse power, but steam locomotive traction was speedily substituted. In 1835, seven years after the com ing signer of the Declaration of Indemencement of construction on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, there were in operation in the United States 1,098 miles of railroad, of which nearly all were in the states bordering on the Atlantic Ocean. Five years later the system had nearly trebled in extent, the lines then beginning to head toward the interior." What marvelous progress has been made since then: It has not been so very long ago since the Wheeling street cars were drawn by horse power, and the first train that pulled into Wheeling over the Baltimore & Ohio, events that are within the memory of some citizens who are not boasting of their old age. Another railway system that did much to bring Wheeling "out of the woods," was the construction of the Pennsylvania railroad, which was begun in 1847. While it did not in years gone by have terminal facilities in this city, having then Bridgeport for, its unloading place, to-day it is at our

In the next ten years what a great story will be written of railroad growth, not only of the country at large, but of West Virginia in particular.

Balanm's Ass.

Senator James K. Jones, of the state of Arkansas, where "Coin" Harvey proposes to seclude himself from a too inquisitive critical public, has finally delivered himself on the results of the recent election. Mr. Jones, as chairman of the Democratic national committee availed himself of all the opportunities of making an ass of himself during the campaign, and, like the obstinate Democrat he is, he persists in continuing in that role. But there is one good word to be said for Jones, and that is his admission that the result was a surprise. He says: "The election result was a great surprise to all Democrats. All were so confident of success that the sweeping Republican victory came as a severe shock. Even on the evening of the day before eletion reassuring telegrams came from leaders that New York was safe for Bryan and from leaders in other pivotal states that the Democrats were sure to win. It was these forecasts that buoyed us up to the last moment, and made the actual result more startling."

The trouble with Mr. Jones and his party of half-breed Democrats was that they depended too much on prejudice and party fealty. They also tried to bunco the people. In fact, they imag-ined that patriotism was dead. Mr. Bryan and his idolatrous following in sulted the intelligence of the country and that insult was resented. No sans man believed that New York would cast its vote for Bryan, but Croker made Jones think so, just as "Jim" Miller tried to make the gullibles in West Virginia believe that the Democrats would triumph in this state. "It was these forecasts," says Mr. Jones, "that buoyed us up," and in this the Arkansas senator clearly shows his incompe tency as a leader.

With all his talking Mr. Jones falls to give the true reason of McKinley's marvelous success. There is no Democratic party to-day, but there is a congregation of malcontents, anarchists and opportunists who are using and abusing the name. Bryan and Bryanism will never be encouraged by the patriotic American people.

Memorial to Ex-Governor Pierpont: A proposition will be made in the next legislature for an appropriation for the erection of a statue of ex-Governor Pirepont, of this state, to be placed in the capitol at Washington. While Mr. Plerpost was not, in the technical point

The sealskin policy has ruined many a promising young husband, and brought the wife to tears and despair, if not to something worse.

Carrier Pigeon Convicted Thief.

The expedient of allowing a carrier pigeon alleged to have been stolen, to fly home might be known, was adopted in East Orange, N. J., the other day, with such success that George Bennett was held for the grand jury on a charge of larceny. He had been accused of stealing game cocks and a homing pigeon from Robert Euraig, but the evidence was so conflicting that it was decided to was so connicing that it was decided to send the pigeon out and see where it went. A feather was plucked from the bird, and shortly after it had been re-leased the dove was found in Euraig's loft.

They live at an actual cost per capita of less than 10 cents a day. Of course this could than 10 cents a day. Or course this could not have been accomplished except through co-operation. Everything they consume is bought at wholesale in large quantities and is cooked in the community kitchen. In the community dining room tables are set for 300 people. Those who do not wish to eat with the crowd are allowed to purchase company stores and cook them at home. Rudyard Kipling's new novel, "Kim," will begin in the December issue of Mc-Clure's Magazine. It is not too much to say that the novelette of the numbr, "Her Guard of Honor," by Martha Michelson, is the strongest short story that has been published in this country in recent years. It cannot be read without profound emotion. The leading characters are an actress and her sor. The child, whom she worships passionately, constitutes lation. One of the jokes at the Lotus Club dinner to Mark Twain was perpetrated by Senator Depew, who told a story about a rural friend of his who once came to hear Mark Twain lecture in Boston. When he got back the senator asked. "Hear Mark?" "Yes." "Was he funny." "Yes, funny; but not d-funny." The senator learned later that his friend had strolled into Music hall and heard the Rev. At a meeting of Universalist ministers in Boston last week one of the brethren opened his heart on the subject of ministers' salaries. He felt deep; that they were too low, and thought, ministers were paid only about half as much as lawyers and doctors of equal ability. He thought, for one thing, that a minister should be paid for officiating at funerals, where the family is in a position to give fees and are not attendants at his church. That point, at least, seems to be well taken, No reason sug-Boston Journal: Lord Salisbury's appointment of his son, son-in-law, and two nephews to his new cabinet is at least a proof that he is not wanting in family affection.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS: Young Husbands Are Too Much

New York Journal: The mania among literary women for marrying men younger than themselves that at first was thought to be merely a freak ap-Lady Randolph Churchill, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett and Mrs. Langtry have done it. Miss Wilkins and Mrs Cruger threaten to do it. Strictly speaking it is, of course, a personal pe cultarity. A woman of forty and over may be presumed to know her own mind. If she elects to marry a boy and raise up' a husband in the way she wants him to go, it is her own affair. Granting the right of every one to indulge her own taste in matrimony-no matter how bizarre-still, a woman wedding a man much her junior is always a spectacle of such rash and reckless daring, it is bound to challenge the attention of the thoughtful. To begin with, it is much easier, as every woman knows, to catch a husband than it is to hold him after you get him. There are animals you can never be sure you have thoroughly domesticated until after they are dead. Men belong to this genus.

Besides, there are few two-handed games that are continuously exciting. Even the woman who holds the trump cards of youth and beauty does not always win out. What, then, must be the difficulties of the situation when, with the clear second sight that comes after marriage, the youthful bridegroom perceives that he has let himself in for an existence with no more thrills to it than playing cribbage with his mother?

Then there is the burden of perpetual youth which the woman must assume. The privilege of growing old, with all its perquisites, is one we do not sufficlently appreciate. From this blessing the mature woman with a young husband is forever debarred. She must always engage in a frantic effort to be young, or if she can't be young to be as young as she can. Every new wrinkle is a calamity; every gray hair a catastrophe; every additional inch of belt measure is a tragedy.

She can never hope to enjoy that luxurions Indian summer of life when a woman lets out her stays, smashes her peroxide bottles, pitched her rouge pot in the fire and abandons herself to being frankly middle aged, and no better looking than God made her.

For her romance the elderly bride is condemned to be a feminine Ponce de Leon, forever searching for the fountain of eterna! youth. Her path leads by way of the corset maker, the dietist, the complexion specialis, and the mas-What she endures at their hands will never be told. Men have been martyred and canonized as saints for, less sufferings, less heroically en-

The young husband must also be amused. There is the awful alternative of turning him over to the tender mercy of a pretty girl of his own age or of the elderly wife treading the measure of his amusements with him. Alas, afte, forty we are no longer so young as we were. We don't take the same interest in views from high points that we did when we had less avoirdupois and more breath. We see more rheumatism than romance in foggy nights on the water. We begin to realize that the Orientals know what they are about when they hire the other people to do their dancing for them.

Dare she give in to her natural yearning for a comfortable rocking chair and the forty winks to which her age entitles her? Never! She must trip the two-step, despite twinges of incipient sout. She must be gay, glddy and girlish at whatever cost. She must keep him interested and amused, and entertaining youth is the hardest and least remunerative work ever undertaken by a sober adult of sound mind

None of us are insensible to the charms of youth. It is perhaps only natural that a lady novelist who has spent many years depicting heroes who were young, handsome and gallant should at last desire to possess a real live specimen herself, but while we admire the intrepid spirit it shows, we can but deplore the judgment that prompts her to marry him. A young husband isn't really worth the trouble he costs.
